The Office of Naval Intelligence furnished the following information to CIA for USIB dissemination

2. Fuel was available for sale, but it was of inferior quality due to too concentrated asphalt base and too high a price. There were no pipelines to the piers, and ships ordering fuel had the deliveries made alongside by lighters. Ship supplies and services were available. All piers had cranes in sufficient quantities to handle ships of 12 thousand tons efficiently. There were rail facilities to all piers and one locomotive-type crane. Final loading always occurs at the seaward end of piers 3 or 4. radio tower atop the agent's building.

3. in port approximately 35 ships of six thousand tons or over. Most of them were Chinese or Soviet

These vessels were loading soybeans. The Soviet ships were off-loading general cargo, cement, concrete, reinforcing materials, and foodstuffs.

4. there were three shipyards in Dairen.

ships of 10 thousand tons could be built in the yards. two ships in the yards and estimate one at 10 thousand tons and the other at three to five thousand tons.

5. a formation of three Chicom jet aircraft overhead

The Seamen's Club provided the only form of entertainment available. The food, particularly shrimp, was very good, and the merchant seamen received very polite treatment there. Although propaganda material was available, no attempt was made to force it on any one.

6. The English-speaking Chinese, all of whom appeared to be of the upper class socially, seemed to be happy with the political situation as it exists in China today. These people favor the Communist form of government. The working classes were not available [redacted] due to language difficulty and their apparent fear of the security police. Their general attitude seemed [redacted] to be sadness and depression. Propaganda material depicting the advantages and opportunities available in China today were displayed everywhere.
